

COUNTY FIREMEN PLAN FOR MEET AT NEW OXFORD

Annual Convention And Picnic Will Be Held On Labor Day; Committees Named.

Plans for the sixth annual convention of the Adams county firemen's association to be held in New Oxford on Labor Day, September 5, were discussed at a quarterly meeting of the association in the P. Radio Romance Through College Station Here Leads to Hymen's Altar

A "radio romance" which began when the bridegroom was operating the amateur broadcasting station at Gettysburg college was culminated April 30 with the marriage of the principals in the "ethereal courtship," according to a recent announcement by the bride's parents.

While Earl George Ports, son of Mrs. Sallie A. Ports, of Hanover, was a student at Gettysburg college he took an active interest in the broadcasting station maintained by the college, and while seeking for distant stations heard a call from the station operated by Miss Virginia Goldsmith, of Milford, Connecticut.

Ports was a member of the graduating class of 1923 and remained here as instructor in physics during 1924 and 1925, afterward becoming operator of station 2MO, at New York City, when he advanced his radio acquaintanceship by personal visits to his bride's home.

In January their engagement was announced and just this week announcement of the marriage was made. The newlyweds will make their home in Milford, Connecticut, during the summer months and afterward will reside at Woodside, Long Island.

Mr. Ports is a graduate of Hanover high school, class of 1919, and of Gettysburg college, class of 1923. In high school he had the dual honor of being president of his class and having the valedictory oration. At Gettysburg college he received the degrees of Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering and Master of Science in physics. At college he received the highest class honor in his senior year and graduated with honors. He was instructor in the department of physics from 1923 to 1925. At present he is engaged in radio communication research at the Bell Telephone Laboratories, New York City.

RIKER ONE OF FEW BROUGHT TO TRIAL UNDER ACT

Is Youngest Hunter To Face Charges Under Law Passed By State Assembly.

Of the six persons in Pennsylvania, prosecuted last year under the act of May, 1921, governing the killing of human beings in mistake for game, five were convicted and one case is pending.

Edward Riker, 15-year-old Lancaster boy, who fatally wounded his father, John, in mistake for a groundhog, near Cross Keys, last Sunday, is at liberty under $1,000 bail, charged with the same offense.

By coincidence, three of the six defendants tried in the state last year had shot human beings in mistake for groundhogs. The other three were killed in mistake for deer and bear. Riker waived a preliminary hearing and was released for the action of the August grand jury.

Young Riker's case, however, differs from any of the six tried in the state last year, District Attorney John P. Butt pointed out, inasmuch as in the half dozen cases, none of the persons killed were shot by relatives or members of immediate families of the victims.

According to reports, Riker will be the first youth of his age to go on trial for violation of the 1921 statute.

The fine, upon conviction, ranges from not less than $500 to $1,000, payable to the family of the person who was shot. Along with the fine, a court must impose a sentence of not less than two nor more than five years. The sentence also carries revocation of the hunter's license for a period of ten years.

Counties in which trials similar to the one to be held in this county next month were conducted last year include Dauphin, Cumberland, Venango, Lancaster, Westmoreland and Lehigh.

EXPERT HUNTERS TO KILL DOES DURING SEASON

Expert Hunters Will Help Decrease Number Of Female Deer Roaming Forests.

The restricted shooting of does under the official supervision of the state, which was decided upon by the state game commission at its meeting at Harrisburg, Thursday, meets with the approval of a majority of the sportsmen of Adams county, who had previously opposed several plans offered to reduce the number of female deer now roaming in the mountains, west of Gettysburg.

The plan adopted by the commission to deputize expert hunters in each district of Pennsylvania to hunt and kill the doe is the most unique in the annals of state game control.

According to estimates, there are more than a million does roaming throughout the state at the present time. This number shows there are ten does for every buck. For some months the overflow of females has become so great that, in their search for food, they have committed numerous depredations on farms.

Damage Reported

Damage caused by the does has mounted in the thousands of dollars and the game commission was faced with a situation of direct need for control of the breeding. A bill in the last session of the legislature establishing an open season for the shooting of does failed of passage because of the sentiment of sportsmen against the shooting of the female.

For the same reason, many letters protesting such a move by the commission have been received.

This condition combined with the wanton and illegal killing of fawns by reckless hunters in past years caused the decision to restrict the hunting to official deputies, members of the commission said.

These deputized hunters will go into the sections where the depredations and damage have been the heaviest. It does not always follow, it was pointed out, that the greatest amount of damage results in the sections where the doe overflow is greatest.

Cut Down Seasons

While this increase in the number of does has occurred in recent years through the ban on female deer, the decreasing numbers of small and other game has become so alarming that the board of game commissioners agreed to shorten the hunting seasons for most classes of game.

The season for deer remains the same, from December 1 to 15, inclusive, but all the others have been shortened.

Small game, such as wild turkeys, grouse, ringnecked pheasants, bobwhite quail and woodcocks, may only be shot from November 1 to 15, inclusive. The usual season is for the entire month.

The season for cottontail rabbits and hares is the month of November only, a decrease of two weeks.

The season for bears was reduced by ten days. It will be from November 16 to December 15. Raccoon season is from November 1 to January 15, which is a month shorter than the usual time.

FARMER SLAIN AT ROCKVILLE

Unsigned Note Found Pinned to Coat of Murdered Man; Farmhand Sees Shooting.

Rockville, Md., July 8.—With a mysterious and unsigned document of some 400 typed words pinned to his clothes, the body of Edward L. Mills, a middle-aged and well-to-do farmer, was found with four bullet wounds in it yesterday on his farm near Hunting Hill, Montgomery county.

Clarence Miles, a young farmhand who has worked for Mills for the last three or four days, said he saw the farmer shot four times by a black-clad stranger who fled into a patch of woodland and escaped.

The murderer fired a fifth shot, Miles said. Mills had been shot twice in the head, once in the heart and again in the wrist.

Poses of citizens and police went into the woods after the assailant, but could not trace him. They asked the Baltimore police department to send a detective to the scene.

The paper found pinned to Mills' clothes was a sort of confession of infidelities, said State's Attorney Peter, of Montgomery county. It was not signed, and the supposition, the state's attorney said, is that it was handed to Mills with a demand that he sign it.

VOLCANO ERUPTS FIRE AND LAVA

Kilauea, Hawaiian Crater, Active Again After Quiet Period; Natives Offer Gifts.

Hilo, Hawaii, July 8.—(AP)—Slumbering Kilauea awoke yesterday and from the crater, Halemauau, 4,000 feet up, streams of lava belched.

Native Hawaiians cast berries and other offerings into the fire pit to appease Pele, goddess of the volcano.

Warning of the eruption was registered on the seismograph of the observatory at the crater rim, four slight tremors being recorded in two hours before midnight Wednesday night.

Awe-Inspiring Spectacle
An earthquake at Hilo, thirty miles from the volcano, awoke a few residents at 3:21 o'clock, and they saw an awe inspiring spectacle.

Four fountains of fire 125 feet high were showered upon the lofty slopes and from the fire pit ran three rivers of blazing rock 1,000 feet wide.

Crowds that rushed toward the pit to watch the display were driven back by sulphur fumes, dust and sand.

A tremor and rumbling at 12:30 a. m. forewarned watchers at the observatory that lava was in motion. The eruptions began within thirty minutes.

During the morning two fountains of fiery rock formed large cones at the base of the pit.

Eruptions in Recent Years
P. M. Wilson, volcanologist in charge of the observatory, estimated the depth of lava at other places in the pit at from fifty to seventy-five feet.

Several times Pele has sent streams of molten rock toward the sea, burning forests and desolating the land. The heaviest eruptions within a decade took place in 1917, 1919 and 1921.

Kilauea, largest active volcano in the world, has a main crater that is eight miles around and 600 feet in depth. It is on a slope of Mauna Loa, a volcano, 13,675 feet high, which was active in May, 1926.

Washington, July 8.—(AP)—The United States has one automobile in operation on each five of its citizens, the automobile division of the Department of Commerce announced yesterday, basing its figures on a recent survey.

It was estimated that 95 per cent of all the automobiles operating in the world are of American origin, though a considerable proportion of them were assembled in foreign branches of American factories.

BAN JOHNSON MAY BE OUSTED

President of American League May be Picked at Meeting of Owners Today.

Chicago July 8.—(AP)—Ban Johnson, president of the American League since its organization twenty-seven years ago, slipped out of town yesterday to attend a special meeting of the club owners in New York today, without knowing whether he would be asked to retire or continue in office until 1935 at a salary of $40,000 a year.

Rumors that the American League executive, whose health has been failing for two years, might be removed from office emanated in reports from New York as the club owners began to gather for their session.

These reports hinted that E. S. Barnard, president of the Cleveland club, or Edward Barrow, business manager of the Yankees, had been mentioned as possible successor in the event that Johnson relinquished the affairs of the league.

Johnson left without any definite knowledge regarding the questions to be considered at the special meeting. If the club owners are planning to retire him or ask for his resignation, the American League head gave no indication of knowing this.

CHAPTER X

The St. Mary's Home for Working Girls was situated atop a hill in the confines of the township of Bothwell, one of a string of hamlets that nestled along the bank of the Hudson, and bedecked it with all the graciousness of a diadem. The St. Mary's home for Working Girls had been built in the days of regal pomp, when any sort of official structure was invested with the dignity of the city, the state, and the country itself. One could imagine the exalted dignity, the pomp and circumstance attendant upon its completion. The rendering of our national anthem, perhaps, accompanied by speeches from the lips of the town's leading citizen, the mayor, and perhaps even the governor himself. The St. Mary's Home for Working Girls reposed graciously upon the hill-top, resplendent in its red brick and white porticoes, with the flower beds laid out like the floral decorations that repose at the feet of the mausoleums. The visitor riding on the road at the foot of the hill could look up and read in red, white and blue flowers, outlined in white-washed little round stones, the name of the imposing red brick structure, and the reason for it. In particular the reason for it. The visitor was oftentimes curious. Noting the bars on the windows he desired to know if it were a jail. No, said the red, white and blue flowers, kept in meticulous evenness a few inches from the ground, not a prison—the St. Mary's Home for Working Girls.

She made a little sound of thanks.

Dressed in gray, their uniforms brightened by the touch of white at the neck and sleeves, the girls might be seen marching two by two along the broad path that was used as an automobile driveway. That is, they might be seen if the visitor were fortunate. More often than not there was no living sign about the place except for the movement of the three poplars that stood guard before the entrance. The driveway might safely be used as a path upon which to walk, so seldom were vehicles of any description seen upon it. On Tuesdays and Fridays there were, of course, the equipages of Raphael, the grocer, and A. Taylor, Dealer in Meats and Poultry of All Kinds. These too, might even be a mirage, for if on Tuesdays and Fridays, A. Taylor, dealer in Meats and Poultry, if, I say, A. Taylor was known to visit the home, where, pray, were the poultry? The girls often evinced curiosity as to these visits. He was known to come, and the sign had been seen by more than one, and yet there had never been skin nor feather of a fowl about the place. Which was strange. Unless, of course, unless he brought the poultry for the private consumption of Maria, which was not so strange. It could very easily be understood, as a matter of fact. Odors were known to float towards inquisitive noses passing Maria's door. Odors foreign to the home. Odors reminiscent of the world outside. Odors it were best to avoid if one would avoid the wave of homesickness that washed in their wake. Not that many of the girls had homes for which to long. It was here, indeed not to dwell too long upon the habitations of many of them before they had been introduced to St. Mary's. But there were some who had memories. These rarely passed Maria's door during the dinner hour.

Mary had killed her memories. Had finally learned a method whereby she could deaden that feeble part of herself that would persist in searching the archives of the past. It had become very simple. It meant, of course, that you deadened that part of you that could feel. It wasn't difficult of attainment, that perfect state. Most of Mary had been killed during the course of certain events, and there wasn't very much feeling left. Which made it much simpler. She often thought of the delight in suffering that would be hers, should she free herself of the little emotion that remained. That would mean that all there would remain of Mary would be the sharp little body that had once leaped toward the sun, and the awing of gold in her hair and the eyes that had misted so delightfully. But now. The mist was gone. There was very little left in those eyes. What peered forth was dull and dry. Glazed. Almost brittle. You felt that it needed very little to shatter what remained.

The one thought that Mary hugged to the aridity of her mind, the one spark that shed warmth and light, was the thought of Robert. The necessity of keeping informed as to his welfare acted as the pin-prick to her deadened consciousness. Young Robert with his silver lance which he wielded so sturdily. Did he cry, young Robert, when alone at night, and nobody near to see the little boy hidden beneath the protective shield of armor? Did he long for Patch and the joy of racing heatedly after tennis balls that had been baited astray? It was hard on David. What strange events had the Sullivans become involved in. A bewildering vortex into which they were being drawn by diabolical forces. A week had dragged itself by in an agony of travail. The days had been loath to pass. They had turned their corners with reluctant feet, peering back with faces that spoke of their aversion to banishment, leaving Mary with that much courage less with which to face the time to come.

Scrubbing the white-washed walls. Interminable space of wall that roamed off into the vague distance. Millions of yards of white-washed walls that glared with the blankness of their passive intensity. Mary scrubbing dully. Up, up rose the mop at the end of the stick, little dirty rivulets dancing their dizzy way down toward her wrists. The wrists that had swung the little rackets and hit the round white balls firmly in the center. Spat! Little firm pats from which they had sped across the boundary of the net. Mary scrubbing white-washed walls.

The scrawled little message from Robert arrived during the hour of recreation, an hour spent behind the high brick walls of the St. Mary's Home Recreation Grounds. A bare plot of ground with the thin shadow of undernourished elms raising feeble branches toward the sky. There were the green benches beneath the trees for rest, although no one rested. It was delightful feeling the springiness of the turf beneath one's feet. Feet that tramped the stone corridors of the Home itself. At either end of the bare yard boards had been nailed to the walls and baskets attached there for basket-ball, but the nets grew tangled and grey with non-usage, and twisted about their iron runs by the winds and rain. The obscure lines of a tennis court could be seen glimmering through the dust. Mary turned abruptly and walked the other way. She sat upon a bench beneath the undernourished elms, her hands held loosely in her lap. Their nails were broken and dulled from the endless wringings of mops thick with the heaviness of floor dirt, and the grime from white-washed walls.

It was then that the letter was brought to her. So pathetic a misfire, with her name sprawled over the beam-dug envelope, and the numerous criss-crosses of addresses written and re-written. She clutched it, and made a little sound of thanks. Robert, oh young Robert!

Darling dearest Mary. Why didn't you write? He was very lonesome. There was a boy. His name was Oscar and he could keep his glasses on his nose by spreading his ears. He was very lonesome, and why didn't Mary come to see him? She had said she would. Oscar said to tell Mary he, Robert, was sick, and then perhaps she would come. Would she come if he were sick? Then he did get sick. It was very funny. He was in bed and the nurse had put things on his chest that hurt. His chest always hurt now. Would Mary please come to her little brother Robert, or Lancelot the Brave?

KITCHEN SHOWER

A surprise kitchen shower was given Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Boyer in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Donald E. Lower, by the Good Samaritan Sunday School class, neighbors and friends. The Boyer home was decorated with roses and lighted with candles and Japanese lanterns. The bride received many useful gifts which were arranged under an umbrella on the porch. One of the most enjoyable features of the evening was the reading of a story about the bride and other members of the class in which the adjectives were supplied by the guests. There went about fifty present. Refreshments were served.

BIRD NESTS

What a wonder world it is
For a little girl of five!
At the June time of the year,
And so good to be alive,
With the meadows to explore
Seeking bird nests near and far,
And a dad of forty-four
Who can show her where they are!

Every evening after tea
We go wandering about
To the nests which we have found.
Where the little birds are out.
And we tiptoe hand in hand
To a certain lovely nest
Where delightedly we stand
At a killdeer's curious nest.

And a meadow-lark we know
With five babies of her own!
What a wonder world it is,
And what miracles are shown!
She can scarcely stay for tea—
How she bolts her pudding through,
With so much she wants to see
And so much she wants to do!

So we hurry out of doors
And excitedly we race
To the mother meadow lark
And the killdeer's secret place.
And we talk of God Who made
All the birds and trees and flowers,
And we whisper, half afraid:
"What a wonder world is ours."

"Well, now we're off for Lollypop Town,
Where the lollypops bloom all crimson and brown,
And sometimes red and often pink,
And other pretty colors I think."

sang dear Uncle Lucky as soon as breakfast was over, and out to the Luckymobile he hopped with his little bunny nephew. Then away they went until by and by, not so very far, they came to a pretty little village named Lollypopville. Stopping before a candy shop, the kind old gentleman rabbit hopped out to buy a box of those delicious little candies on sticks.

"Hello!" by and by shouted Uncle Lucky, saluting an old billygoat who was ploughing a field with a team of dogs. "What are you going to plant, my dear friend?"

"Buckwheat for Aunt Jemima's pancakes," answered the obliging Billygoat, and clicking his tongue against his teeth, he went on with his ploughing.

Just then along came Cookey Doodle and Henny Jenny to pick up the worms which the plough had uncovered in the new, soft earth.

"Cock-a-doodle-do, have a worm or two."

Here's a snail and there's a slug,
Queer old beetle or a bug.
Hurry up, my pretty Hen.
Pick them up while I count ten."

sang the little rooster, proudly flapping his wings. Goodness me, one almost might think he had dug out the worms for Henny Jenny.

But, gracious sakes alive! Just as everything was going along so pleasantly, Hungry Hawk came sailing through the air.

"Get under the bushes!" shouted brave Cookey Doodle, and while the

TOMORROW

Starts Our Big 7 Day Sale

Be On Hand During The Week To Buy At The Extraordinarily Low Prices

We have not offered an item for this sale that is not bona-fide merchandise such as we always carry and every item offered is worthy of your consideration if you are interested in saving money.

REMEMBER

7 Big Days 7

Starting Saturday, July 9 And Ending July 16

We have discovered from our own experience and from talks with other merchants that you, our customers, want to know "why" when a store advertises a big sale with drastic price cuts. You want to know if you were cheated when you paid full price for an article not purchased during a sale. You also want to know how a store can sell at these low prices, when, as you say "he is not in business for his health." No we are not in business for our health, but it pays us far better to loose part or all of our profit and turn the merchandise we have on hand into cash than to carry it on our shelves. And that is the real "why" of this big sale that starts on Saturday, the 9th day of July.
